"The thing that sets it apart here at LPU has been the personal contact with the professors and leaders. We've heard story after story about people's personal lives being meshed with their cohorts and their professors. This is not just me reading stuff online and trying to check a box to get letters after my name, this really is a total life pursuit."

—Ron Flores, MASL Student

3 | ABOUT RESIDENCY WEEK

ABOUT LPU RESIDENCY

Life Pacific University's residency week provides a platform for graduate students to connect with their cohort, allowing them to form meaningful relationships. The cohort model facilitates collaborative learning, accountability, and mutual support. Students enroll in courses together, and this fosters a sense of community and a deeper level of engagement with the subject matter. Furthermore, the cohort model creates networking opportunities that may be useful for career advancement. "For me, it was mostly hearing the testimony of other people and being able to hear the community and having that family to support each other as you are going in this journey with them which is interesting because you don't see that in other programs."

—Zuly Vasquez, MASL Student
